Don't Ask Me, I'm Just the Teacher!

By Ms. Lisa Kalechstein, VRCHS Science and English Teacher

If you have to ask your teacher a question, that means you don't understand something that you're supposed to understand, right? So you shouldn't ask questions, because it'll make you look stupid, right?

WRONG! Teachers, especially in an independent study program like ours, love when you ask questions. And yet, many times our students feel shy, or just do not ask questions, perhaps because they're afraid to look bad. This is understandable, since we are all taught that in school, we're supposed to have the right answers; after all, that's what we're graded on- what we know, not what we don't know.

And yet, how are you supposed to learn something new, and difficult, all alone at home with your textbook? Independent study requires you, the independent learner, to come in and ask questions so you can get the help you need to learn new and often very complicated subjects. When a student asks me a question, it's like someone is knocking on the door. I finally have the opportunity to open the door and let you in, into a new doorway of understanding for you. If you don't knock, that door can't open.

Too often, when I ask my students if they have any questions from their homework or study guide before I give them the test, they invariably (know what that means? Ask your teacher! Or better yet, look it up in a dictionary-I did!) say "no", that they have no questions, and then they don't do that great on the test. If only they had told me they didn't understand something, and ask me questions, they probably would have done a lot better.

When you ask a question, it shows us that you understand the material enough to be able to see clearly what you still don't understand, and want to know. It demonstrates independent thinking, motivation to learn, and the wisdom and self-confidence to ask. Here's what President Obama just said about this topic in his "Back to School Event" speech on September 8, 2009:

"Don't be afraid to ask questions. Don't be afraid to ask for help when you need it. I do that every day. Asking for help isn't a sign of weakness; it's a sign of strength. It shows you have the courage to admit when you don't know something, and to learn something new. So find an adult you trust – a parent, grandparent or teacher; a coach or counselor –and ask them to help you stay on track to meet your goals".

So I have a request, and a challenge. Make sure you find something in your homework that you don't understand fully, and ask your teacher to explain it to you before you take the test. Do it for your core subject, every week before the test, and even for your electives (especially math!). I assure you your grades will improve, your relationship with your teacher will improve (remember- teachers love questions!) and you may even discover that you, of all people, enjoy school more, because the joy of learning new things has not been lost.

Vista Real Credit Crushers!

Completing a semester's worth of credits on independent study takes hard work, but making up credits (or getting ahead!) takes even more dedication and endurance! That is why we created the Credit Crushers incentive program to recognize all students who earn more than 30 credits per semester. Students receive a certificate of achievement, their name on a wall of recognition, and prizes donated by local businesses including Paschen Management Corporation (owner of several local McDonald's restaurants) and The Habit. For Spring semester, we had over 100 students earn more than 30 credits, with over 30 of those students earning more than 40 credits! These students are full-time achievers! The Coffee Bean and Tea Leaf has also donated twenty-five $5 gift cards for this current semester, which will be given to our top 25 earners. Keep up the great effort!

HOURS for Success Now!
